You Are Not Insignificant By the Interleaguer Staff

It was August 22, 1814 and the fate of one of this country's most important documents was in jeopardy. British forces were mounting an attack on our capitol and James Monroe, the Secretary of State at the time, went to a small village by the sea to monitor their advance. Upon arriving he became convinced that U.S. troops would not be able to turn back the British advance.

Monroe sent a warning back to Washington where an insignificant clerk named Stephen Pleasonton received the message. Pleasonton went to the Secretary of War, John Armstrong Jr., to get direction as to how to proceed. Armstrong was unalarmed and told Pleasonton not to worry so much. Fortunately for us all, Stephen Pleasonton didn't listen.

Pleasonton gathered several coarse linen bags and started collecting important documents, treaties, letters from George Washington, secret journals of Congress, and many other items. As Pleasonton began to walk out of the building, he noticed one other important document hanging on the wall in a frame and stuffed that into one of the bags as well.

Pleasonton had all the documents taken to a mill in Virginia but he was still very concerned about their safety. The next day, he decided to take them by wagon, 35 miles, to Leesburg, Virginia, where they were stored in an abandoned stone house. He went to sleep that night much more at ease, knowing he had secured their safety.

The next day news came that Washington D.C., including the building the documents had been taken from, had been burned to the ground. Stephen Pleasonton had saved all the important documents, including the one that was in a frame on the wall that he had almost missed. And what was that document you ask? Well, none other than the original copy of the Declaration of Independence.

None of us are insignificant. No matter what our position, we can all make a difference.

Kare Youth League Handbook

In this week's installment of the Kare Youth League Family Handbook we include grooming and dress (not all subjects included).

Grooming and Dress

Kare Youth League emphasizes high personal standards in speech, conduct and grooming. To maintain a high personal standard and strengthen the team concept, no member should dress in any way that brings undue personal attention. Boys' haircuts must be in the traditional style, with hair off the ears and neck, and above the collar of their shirts. Mohawks, tails, puffs, or any exaggerated style including coloring is not permitted. Members are not permitted to wear body coloring or tattoos. Boys may not wear jewelry or earrings. During sports activities, girls may not wear jewelry. Logos on shirts, etc. should only reflect the moral values of the team and organization.

Schedule for Saturday, October 5
