We Can Never Forget: A Story from 9-11 (Part 2) By Andy J. Semotiuk

For perhaps the first time, Ron DiFrancesco realized he was no longer in control of the events in his life. A sense of doom descended on him and the rest of the people trapped between the floors. Unable to go up, once again he turned to go down facing the billowing smoke and fire coming up the staircase. Despite using a piece of drywall to shield him from the heat, as he proceeded his body was being burned.

He thought it was all over. Overcome with smoke, he was about to give up. Just then Ron says he heard a voice. He cannot really explain exactly whose voice it was, but he drew strength and faith from it to continue downward despite the burns. Then he heard a second voice, the voice of a firefighter. While he could not see in the smoke, the firefighter said to come in the direction of his voice further down the stairs.

When Ron reached the firefighter he was quickly examined and told to go down to the bottom where he would be cared for, so that's what he did. Since he was now below the crash site, the sprinklers had come on making the descent much easier. When he finally emerged on the ground floor, he was blocked from exiting the building by firefighters who said it was too dangerous because of falling debris. Instead he was directed into the basement of the building so he could exit there.

Ron descended below. As he reached downstairs he suddenly heard the rumble of the building pancaking down on him. He turned to look back down the corridor where he saw a huge fire ball coming.

Ron woke up in the hospital. There were burns to the great majority of his body. His contact lenses had melted to his eyes. It took years to recover. But he had made it. He was the last known survivor of the South Tower of the World Trade Center bombing.
