The Thought Card: Part Two

By Hanoch McCarty

On the first Tuesday of the class, I dutifully brought in my index card with my name and the date written carefully on the top line. I then added, "All that glitters is not gold." The following day, Dr. Simon returned the cards to the class. Mine had a penciled note, "What does this quote mean to you? Is it significant?" This comment made me uneasy. Apparently he was taking these cards seriously. I surely didn't want to reveal myself to him.

The week progressed. At first, I thought he was going to propagandize us for or against something, but not Professor Simon. Instead, he simply asked us to think, research, question, and then come up with our own responses. Frankly, I became even more uncomfortable. There was something delightful, refreshing and inviting about his teaching, but since I had rarely experienced this style, I had no "coping strategies" to help me deal with him.

After the fight with my dad, I raced down the hallway, 10 minutes late to class. Just outside the door, I took an index card from my notebook and wrote my name and the date on it. Desperate for something to write on it, I could only think about the fight I'd just had with my dad. "I am the son of an idiot!" I wrote and then dashed into the room. He stood, conducting a discussion, near the door. Looking up at me, he reached out for the card and I handed it to him and took my seat.

The moment I reached my seat, I felt overwhelmed with dread. What had I done? I gave him that card! Anger, about my dad, about my life! I don't remember anything about the rest of that class session. All I could think about was the card.

I had difficulty sleeping that night, filled with a nameless dread. What could these cards be all about? Why did I tell him that about my dad? Suppose he contacts my dad? What business is it of his anyway? Wednesday morning arrived and I reluctantly got ready for school. Dr. Simon eventually handed out the cards face down. (conclusion next week...)
